RE: Who's to Blame?

When a catastrophe occurs, the media and political pundits show up on national tv with their theories of who's to blame.

Most of the time, just like in Orlando, its clear that the shooter is 99% to blame with the other 1% of blame going to the government official that signed off on the shooter's clearance status.

The big question now should be about prevention. Americans seldom hear the FBI or law enforcement agencies point to lax gun control laws.

Law enforcement is well aware that the bad guys will always be able to get guns and the material to make bombs is easily accessible and the recipe to make them is right on the internet.

How many more disasters like Orlando will it take to activate our powerful intelligence agencies and military might?

On Thursday, a compassionate President, with a heavy heart, met with many of the survivors and witnesses of the Pulse shooting. It was an up close and personal account of one of the darkest days in American history.

So what happens next?

Wouldn't it be apropos that these peace-loving witnesses and survivors of the Pulse disaster were the catalyst that begins the political and military action to end hate crimes and terrorism forever? Then no one would have died in vain this time in Orlando.

The Bommarito Automotive Group add their condolences to the victim's families and the survivors. This act of terrorism will never be accepted in America, the "Land of the Free."
