RE: NAFTA, America and You

NAFTA is a trade agreement negotiated by George H. W. Bush and later signed into law after a much heated debate on December 8, 1993 by then-president Bill Clinton.

The NAFTA bill was supposed to benefit the American economy by eliminating tariffs for those involved; the US, Canada and Mexico. Before NAFTA was signed into law, many of our lawmakers warned that NAFTA would create dozens of new bureaucracies, diminish US sovereignty, mandate millions in foreign aides and loan guarantees, create reams of regulations plus ship hundreds of thousands of jobs and businesses to Mexico in pursuit of cheap labor.

Bush and Clinton both hoped for benefits to our economy, but NAFTA has unfortunately become a serious negative for us Americans.

By 1993, this American businessman, who somehow survived President Carter's 21% interest rate program, was closely watching every financial move our political leaders were making and this one looked destined to fail.

To me it was simple to figure out that it would not be good for my US auto industry. At that time my manufacturers were paying about $18 per hour plus pensions and benefits vs. Mexico's $2 per hour, plus a manufacturing facility could be built in Mexico for 30 to 40% less than in the USA.

NAFTA created results, which are still happening in 2017, that have jobs and businesses still going to Mexico non-stop.

No matter what your politics are, informed Americans must support a newly negotiated North American Free Trade Agreement.
