RE: Not Fun Anymore

I was having fun with my ten point system trying to find the right candidate to be my next president. But for me, the fun has stopped because I'm finding it hard to believe in the system that we voters are stuck with to find a nominee winner. The possibility of a contested convention now looms greatly and there is a foul odor and distaste in how delegates are going to be wooed if either party ends up in a contested convention. You know like back door deals made, jobs promised or worse.

Did you know that in 2008, Hillary Clinton got more votes than Barack Obama but did not have enough delegates to win the nomination? Did you know that a large number of the so-called delegates are full time lobbyists?

We now know that Hillary Clinton supporters are worried about the ongoing federal investigation about the emails and Benghazi and she has been criticized by Bernie Sanders about her paid speeches.

Although Bernie Sanders is behind in delegates, that could change over night, so if you enjoy his enthusiasm and his power speeches but do not want to pay 90% in taxes, don't worry, we still have the Senate and Congress and the voice of the people to control that idea.

The Republican Party leaders are busy trying to kill the messenger, Donald Trump, so they are now headed to a possible contested convention for a prize that may be worthless come general election time.

It's hard to say at this time who the power brokers, heavy donors, sore losers and status quo lovers, of both parties, will choose and the American voter will then be left with that person.

I personally never thought Donald Trump could cut through all that above mentioned group's clutter, but I give him credit for exposing them and how they won't ever risk electing a President who wants to make big changes or even allow one to do so. Just ask President Barack Obama, he knows and Bernie Sanders will probably soon know it too.

The big question is; When will powerful party leaders and campaign finance rules stop mudding up the water so Americans can exercise their right to vote and be sure it really counts?

The truth is, this present election system has created dissatisfaction among all eligible voters from both parties, so it's time to demand a more level playing field for our candidates. It can be fixed.

Personally, I'm still working hard with my ten point system, but cutting through the clutter and the smokescreens are making it tough. I'll definitely be voting for someone and I hope you do too.

You won't find any smokescreen or clutter when you elect the Bommarito Automotive Group for your next car purchase. You will simply get Missouri's best car deal every day, every time.
