RE: Is There a Better Way?

Right now, that's the big question on most American's minds. Those of us who were promised healthcare, a fair practical tax code, an infrastructure quick fix, and some positive action for the good people who are now hung up on our 30 year-old neglected immigration programs. So much work to do.

A recent phone call from a Hillary Clinton supporter got me thinking about a better way. This gentleman that supported Hillary Clinton said his young son's family had just been hit with a large co-pay bill. It was important money to them and was designated for some leisure time, not a medical co-pay. He reiterated that the two-party system was on the wrong path to ever solve problems and we needed a new plan.

He said the investigation of Trump was not the answer and he commented that if Hillary Clinton had won, her and Obama would be the target and time once again would go by with no serious progress of our country's serious problems.

I tried hard to keep this smart man on the line but he left after a long sigh. Had he stayed, I would have said, "I'm sure President Obama knows what you are talking about."

It appears now that Post readers want action and solution not rhetoric. Don't we all? So I began to talk to some people I respect about how most of us try to solve our own problems. Their consensus was a simple one; if change is needed and the people we were counting on to do it can't, the solution was to find new people with new ideas who will do it and not tolerate the status quo.

If nothing is done by a now broken two-party system by next Sunday, look for some game changer plans on this Post page next Sunday. My friends and I are very concerned and are sincerely looking for a better plan. Probably won't be perfect, and it may not even be legal, but it will be a better plan guaranteed, minus politics.

If you think there is no hurry, check on our now bankrupt state of Illinois, who spent all the money collected on their lottery games to pay their bills, but now have none left to pay the winning players. A country going broke and no action is not good for we the people.
