BATTERY JUMPING SAFETY TIPS

Always keep a pair of quality jumper cables in each car preferably with heavier gauge copper cables. There are some basic safety precautions you should take before jump starting your car's battery:

- Never smoke or use anything that may spark as car batteries contain hydrogen and oxygen, two gasses that could unite and explode
- Do not try to jump-start a frozen battery as it could explode and if there are cracks in the battery casing, don't try to jump start it
- Make absolutely sure where the positive and negative posts are located on both batteries.
- Turn off both vehicles and remove the keys from both vehicles so there is no electrical current flowing when connecting the cables
- Make sure the ends of the jumper cables never touch each other and do not stand in water

The actual jumping process is simple but you need to be alert to what you are doing. Attach the positive (red) cable to the dead battery post marked positive (+). Then attach the other end of the same cable to the positive post on the live battery. Do not allow the cable ends to touch. Next, attach the negative (black) cable to the negative (-) post of the live battery. Then attach the other end of the cable to the engine block of the car with the dead battery. Allow power to flow between the two vehicles for 2-3 minutes before starting the car with the dead battery. Reverse this process when disconnecting cables.
