DID YOU KNOW...

When fossil fuels are burned to produce electricity to power your vehicle, carbon dioxide is released into the atmosphere.

Carbon emissions then cause climate change by trapping heat.

We know that you want to make sure you aren't harming the environment when you make purchases, and you want to support companies that feel the same way.

That's why we've partnered with The Carbon Offset Company @thecarbonoffsetcompany to plant 15 trees per vehicle sold! And each tree offsets 679.7 pounds of carbon!

With our partnership and promise of planting 15 trees for every vehicle that we deliver, we know it will take a small step towards making a huge difference for the environment!

EMPLOYEE NEWS

WELCOME NEW EMPLOYEES

"From our Project Z announcement last October, we have received significant interest from customers, and now we have something tangible to show them in our prototype FCEV" stated Bob Petz, Senior Vice President of Vehicle and Parts Sales, Hino Trucks.

Commercial customers who are interested in learning more about the hydrogen fuel cell electric Hino XL8 can view it live here <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=YyazZk2ICPA>

For energy intensive applications like long-haul and heavy-duty trucks, hydrogen is one of the most interesting energy carriers, presenting operators with a quiet, smooth and continuously strong performance, all without emitting any emissions.

A major industry for North America, whether hauling foods, farming goods, construction materials or clothes, trucks are almost everywhere in the continent, with very few commuters being able to travel down the highway without seeing one. Sadly, many of these vehicles emit high amounts of carbon emissions and cause harm to the environment.

However, this is something that North America, with the help of its thriving mobility sector, hopes to change with the introduction of zero emission technologies such as hydrogen.
